A clear, impartial guide to

Right to light

rics.org/consumerguides
Contents

Right to light..................................................................................................................3
What is a ‘right to light’?...........................................................................................3
What can you do? .......................................................................................................4
Consult the experts ..................................................................................................5
Existing buildings......................................................................................................6
Dealing with disputes – Neighbour Disputes Service ..........................................7
Free RICS guides.....................................................................................................8
Further information...................................................................................................9
Find a Surveyor ..........................................................................................................9
Right to light

In your home, just over half the room should be lit by natural light and about half the room in a commercial building.

What is a ‘right to light’?

A right to light may be acquired by ‘anyone who has had uninterrupted use of something over someone else’s land for 20 years without consent, openly and without threat, and without interruption for more than a year.’

Your right to light is protected under common law, adverse possession and in England and Wales by the Prescription Act 1832. There is no statutory right to light in Scotland. If you live in Scotland and are concerned about limited light, an RICS member practising in Scotland will be able to advise you and may also be able to help you with any negotiations.

If a new building limits the amount of light coming in through a window and the level of light inside falls below the accepted level, then this constitutes an obstruction. Unless you waive your rights you are entitled to take legal action against your neighbour.

Any kind of ‘development’ can potentially block the light coming into your home. For instance:

• a neighbour’s new shed
• garden walls
• extensions
• part of a new housing or commercial development.

If the developer hasn’t taken your right to light into consideration, you may have a case for compensation or for negotiating changes to that development to safeguard your light.

Home extensions are a common cause of right to light disputes as homeowners may employ a local building firm to extend their property without knowing the development could affect their neighbours.

The most common problem is where the neighbour has a window to the side of their house to which the light is blocked by a high wall. On a small building project, people rarely employ a right to light specialist – the first they know of a problem is when they receive a letter from their neighbour’s solicitor.
What can you do?

If you know a planned development may restrict your right to light, even after planning permission has been granted, you are within your rights to oppose it.

Depending on the extent of the problem, should construction go ahead, the courts are able to either award compensation, cut back the offending part of the development or a combination of both. In extreme cases, the court may issue an injunction to prevent the development altogether.

However, a court is unlikely to grant an injunction against a developer in cases where a small financial payment can be made as compensation – especially for minor matters or late applications.

So think carefully before pursuing this route, as injunctive proceedings can be very expensive.
Consult the experts

Always get professional advice before starting legal proceedings against your neighbour or a commercial developer.

Speak to an RICS member who specialises in right to light work. They will be able to explain exactly what your rights are and help you resolve the problem, if possible without having to go to court.

If a development is still at the planning stage, your RICS member adviser will be able to estimate the amount of light that is likely to be lost as a result of the new structure. They will make a visual assessment and help you decide whether or not you have a sufficiently strong enough case to go to court.

Some firms use three-dimensional modeling software to calculate how the existing light will be affected by any proposed change in the way light enters the building. By working out the amount of light left, it is possible to assess how much compensation might be paid.

There are several specialists who can carry out this type of assessment. Some RICS members will either carry out the procedure themselves or recommend another RICS surveying firm to do it for you.
Existing buildings

You might still be able to take legal action if you are concerned that the light coming into your house or business has been affected by an existing structure.

In some cases, even after completion, the courts may demand that a development is altered to minimise the impact on your property. This is rare but does happen.

Again, consult an RICS member specialising in this area and they will help you through the process for seeking compensation or other positive action.

Note: if you do find yourself in a dispute over right to light, take advice from a professional but remember you may have to pay for their advice and modify your plans to keep the peace with your neighbours.
Dealing with disputes – Neighbour Disputes Service

The key to resolving a dispute speedily and successfully is to seek expert advice as soon as possible.

Neighbour disputes almost always involve emotive issues. RICS has developed an innovative form of alternative dispute resolution which is specifically designed to resolve a wide range of neighbour disputes. This service offers a significantly cheaper and quicker alternative to the courts.

Specialist RICS members are independently appointed by RICS to provide impartial advice to anyone involved in a neighbour dispute. These professionals are knowledgeable experts who understand technical and/or legal matters, and can provide neutral advice on neighbour disputes and other property related matters.

Full detail of this service and other RICS dispute resolution services such as planning and environmental mediation service can be found at www.rics.org/drs or:

e: drs@rics.org
t: 020 7334 3806

Contact details for dispute resolution services in Scotland are:

e: drsscotland@rics.org
t: 0131 225 7078
Free RICS guides

RICS has a range of free guides available for the property issues listed here.

Development issues
- Compulsory purchase
- Home extensions

Home hazards
- Dilapidations
- Flooding
- Japanese knotweed
- Subsidence

Neighbour issues
- Boundary disputes
- Party walls
- Right to light

Residential
- Buying a home
- Buying and selling art and antiques at auction
- Home surveys
- Letting a property
- Property auctions
- Renting a property
- Selling a home
Further information

We hope this guide is useful to you. If you’d like to know more about right to light or how RICS can help, please contact us.

Visit our website
rics.org/consumerguides
alternatively email
contactrics@RICS.org or call the
RICS Contact Centre 02476 868 555

Consumer helplines
RICS offers telephone helplines giving you 30 minutes of free advice on:
• Boundary disputes
• Party walls
• Compulsory purchase.

Just call 02476 868 555 and you will be put in touch with an RICS member local to you, willing to provide a free 30 minute initial consultation.
Lines are open
0830 – 1730 (GMT), Monday to Friday.

Find a Surveyor

Contact us if you want to find independent, impartial advice from a qualified professional with good local knowledge.

Look out for firms that are ‘Regulated by RICS’. Estate agents and surveying firms that are regulated by RICS are easy to spot as they use ‘Regulated by RICS’ on their stationery and promotional material.

To find an RICS firm in your area visit www.ricsfirms.com
alternatively email
contactrics@RICS.org or call the
RICS Contact Centre 02476 868 555
Advancing standards in land, property and construction.

RICS is the world’s leading qualification when it comes to professional standards in land, property and construction.

In a world where more and more people, governments, banks and commercial organisations demand greater certainty of professional standards and ethics, attaining RICS status is the recognised mark of property professionalism.

Over 100,000 property professionals working in the major established and emerging economies of the world have already recognised the importance of securing RICS status by becoming members.

RICS is an independent professional body originally established in the UK by Royal Charter. Since 1868, RICS has been committed to setting and upholding the highest standards of excellence and integrity – providing impartial, authoritative advice on key issues affecting businesses and society.

RICS is a regulator of both its individual members and firms enabling it to maintain the highest standards and providing the basis for unparalleled client confidence in the sector.

RICS has a worldwide network. For further information simply contact the relevant RICS office or our Contact Centre.